Divine Delay Level #1

27 January 2024

Divine Delay could be an obnoxious detour, I admit it can be frustrating to know that you belong somewhere, and your heart goes out to where it should be, but it feels like the Grand Canyon is standing between you and your destiny.

"Most people when they get to heaven, they will be shocked." That comes as no surprise to me. I don't have to be shocked over it myself, especially for those who walk in unbelief and steal faith opportunities from me because of their stinking unbelieving hearts, I wish they would all just stay away from me, and stop cluttering up society with their disinformation campaigns.

"People are acting like the last three years never happened." Of course they are, you would think that the desperation of going through a pandemic would get people serious about God and would convince them to repent—and call out to God for miracles. But they didn't, they gravitated toward their blind vanities during the lockdowns, just like most pastors stubbornly cleave to their beliefs in cessationism.

As far as hybrids are concerned, I think it's possible that they existed, the Bible has a lot to say about hybrids but they're not easily found unless God wants to show them to you, or unless you ask Him to show them in His Word. Such as the “satyr” or the “cockatrice” spoken about in the book of Isaiah.

However, I like when Dr. Kevin Zadai said that we need to work with The Holy Spirit so that He can let us know who is causing the delay in our lives. And how we got to be able to hear from God, to know who is causing the delay, if it's us, God, or the enemy.
